WORKING TOGETHER TO COMBAT POVERTY

Combating poverty in a recession

As Scotland enters recession, there is a real danger that the limited progress made in the fight against poverty is lost. Unemployment is increasing, fuel and food prices have risen dramatically and the decline in child poverty has stalled. Against this background the Scottish Government and COSLA have recently launched a new framework - Achieving our Potential - for tackling poverty and inequality. But with economic problems mounting, what are the prospects for an anti-poverty strategy based on the assumption of growth?

A new approach to tackling poverty

Achieving our Potential sets out a new approach to tackling poverty. There is an emphasis on tackling low incomes and a greater focus on income inequality. In line with the concordat between Scottish Government and Scottish Local Authorities there is also more emphasis on the role of local actions to tackle poverty. This series of free seminars organised by the Poverty Alliance will look at what the prospects are for tackling poverty in the current economic climate. The discussion will focus on:

- The latest trends: what is happening with poverty and social exclusion across Scotland, and what may change
- The new Framework: what does it mean for the fight against poverty in Scotland, and can it be delivered in the midst of a recession
- Local and national action: how can we take action locally and nationally to ensure that progress in the fight against poverty is maintained

Who Should Attend?
